Two Flint Axes from the North Downs

The two artefacts described here were passed to the writer in recent months for identification and recording. Both had been recovered from the North Downs and represent fine examples of their types. They have now been returned to their owners, to whom thanks are due for allowing recording to take place.

The first piece (this page) comprises a slender tranchet axe or adze measuring 210mm in length, 48-50mm in width, 33mm thick, weighing 450.43g. It has been neatly alternately flaked from an elongated nodule of attractively banded pale honey-coloured flint, the latter presumably obtained from a derived secondary source on or close to the parent chalk outcrop. It has a roughly diamond or oval cross-section, and both faces of the cutting edge have been re-sharpened by the removal of transverse flakes. Small patches of smooth worn cortex survive at the butt and at the midpoint of one face.

Christopher Jardine reported it to Bourne Hall Museum, Ewell in October 1999, as having been found by his late father Leslie Jardine some forty-five years previously, in the upcast of a badger set on the western slopes of Box Hill. From his description the findspot appears to have lain above The Whites, a steep chalk cliff carved into the Downs by the right bank of the River Mole a little upstream of Burford Bridge (c TQ 177 516).

The piece belongs to a growing number of Mesolithic finds from the Mole valley corridor. To those listed in Wymer's Gazetteer of Mesolithic sites in England and Wales (1977, 281), for example, can be added two non-tranchet adzes found by Tom Walls near the 'Bailey Bridge, Leatherhead, TQ 165 552' a little further downstream.

The second piece (frontispiece) comprises an unground chipped flint preform measuring 213mm in length, 71mm in width at its widest point, 35mm thick, weighing 560.8g. It is in crisp condition and has been knapped from a nodule of banded flint: translucent grey-brown at the butt, and opaque cherry grey-pink at its broad crescentic cutting edge. A small patch of smooth thin cortex survives towards the butt on one face, which again suggests that the parent nodule had been obtained from a derived source. The axe has a symmetrical lenticular cross section and has been radially and invasively flaked across both faces. The lateral edges are keen and straight, although the chatty nature of the flint has resulted in some slight step fracturing at two or three points.

Geoffrey Holmes reported it to the Museum of London in January 2000, having initially taken it into the Natural History Museum, South Kensington. The axe had been found a month or so before by a friend of his son's on land belonging to Botley Hill Farm, east of Woldingham (farm centred TQ 395 555) though the exact findspot and circumstances of the discovery still remain unclear at the time of writing (July 2000). Nevertheless, the piece is a handsome one and bears comparison with other Neolithic chipped flint preforms, of which the cache of three 'South Downs' examples from Peaslake are perhaps the best known examples from the county.

Assuming that it will eventually prove possible to confirm the exact findspot, the piece joins a wide range of lithics and other finds already reported from this particular area of the North Downs.

HERITAGE OPEN DAYS

There is free admission to many historic buildings across the county not usually open to the public over the weekend of the 16th and 17th September, just as elsewhere across the country. Regional efforts to secure such access have been co-ordinated nationally by the Civic Trust with support from the Department of National Heritage in a pan-European programme of events initiated by the Council of Europe.

Last year Maureen and I were able to publish details of 30 properties that were going to be open in Guildford, four from elsewhere in the borough, 39 in Mole Valley, ten in Waverley, three in Elbridge and one each in Runnymede and Reigate & Banstead.
As you can see below, many more openings and other events have been made available to us to publicise this year, although there are some curious omissions. Are there none opening up in Runnymede, Spelthorne or Elbridge? And why so few in some of the other boroughs?

GUILDFORD

The Guildhall, High Street.
c1550; with important façade added in 1683 by public subscription.
Access will include the balcony overlooking the High Street. Grade I listed building and

COMMUNITY ARCHAEOLOGY

Banstead Heath
16th September 2000
The second of the two Landscape Survey projects being undertaken this year will be launched at Banstead Methodist Church Hall, Woodgavel, The Drive, Banstead, off the A217. As reported in Bulletin 337, the Landscape Survey projects flow from the Farnham Conference and aim to stimulate local interest in understanding the history of their own locality, and inviting participation by local people.

The project will be led by Chris Currie, who will provide training and guidance for all volunteers, whether in surveying techniques or guiding would-be researchers in finding their way through documents and research material available at Castle Arch and the History Centre at Woking.

The meeting will again provide an opportunity to meet other members of the Society. There will be a short talk about the Surrey Industrial History Group, the Parish Survey lists proposed by the Conservation Committee, the SMR, the Ancient Monuments Monitoring Scheme, and an introduction to the Society's Library and research material. After tea, Chris will talk about the plans for the Banstead Heath project. There will be ample time for discussion. The meeting is aimed at local secretaries and local societies on the eastern side of Surrey, but anyone wishing to attend is welcome.

If you cannot make the 16th September, the first training session specifically for the project is on the 30th September, again at the Banstead Methodist Church Hall at 2.00 pm.

EXCAVATION

Farnham Park
The test excavation previously planned for May will now be held on 21st and 22nd September, possibly over-running into the weekend. The object of the trial trenching will be to establish the nature of the gravel platform adjacent to the postern gate of Farnham Castle. The results of the excavation will be taken into consideration in the management plan for the park. Anyone interested in helping should contact David Graham on 01420 472761 or email: david-graham@msn.com
