Excavations at Bookham Courte 2015
We regret that owing to the indisposition of the editor this is a shortened version of the Bulletin. Planned articles that have unfortunately not been included will be in a future edition.

SURREY ARCHAEOLOGICAL SOCIETY AND GUILDFORD MUSEUM

I should start this note with apologies for the absence of the advertised questionnaire from the last Bulletin. It should now be included with this edition and can also be found on the Society’s website. There is still time for members to register their views on the Society’s future before our meeting on 27 February and we would welcome them as soon as possible.

Matters have moved on since the last Bulletin. Working with our lawyers, the Society sought a negotiated agreement with Guildford Borough Council. The Borough Council now say that the Society’s collections on display and in store at Guildford Museum itself can stay there free of charge and offered a three month extension for the purported Section 25 Notice to 29 April 2016 to allow time for more detailed discussions. They have specified the high charges they wish to make for storage of Society collections held at the Woking Road depot and a more reasonable charge for the office to remain at least for the time being and probably at 48 Quarry Street. It was made clear that it would not be possible for the Society’s library to stay in the Margary Room at Castle Arch on the grounds that the Borough Council intends to use the room to extend the Museum displays.

Work has taken place at the Abinger Research Centre where three outhouses have been cleared to provide space for new shelving in case we have to remove our collections from the Woking Road depot. The large reserve collection of archaeological journals has been transferred from Abinger to temporary storage leaving space that could be used for the library books currently at Castle Arch.

The situation was considered at a special meeting of the Society’s Council on 8 January. It was decided that it would be useful to maintain an office at Castle Arch while the changes take effect but thought unlikely that the library could be located in 48 Quarry Street. Floor loading would be a problem and the considerable expense involved in fitting out a new room and moving the books would probably not be worthwhile for a short-term relocation.

Council also decided the proposed charges for storage at Woking Road appear far too expensive when compared with alternatives and agreed to move the archaeological collections if necessary. Council recognised these changes will have major implications in terms of how we deal with our collections in future but there was also considerable enthusiasm for the opportunities that would arise. The archaeological collections are badly in need of reorganisation and fresh study and it is intended to develop a programme to realise this research potential. The opportunity will also arise to involve other museums throughout the county. Options for temporary exhibitions and other ways of presenting the results of the Society’s work can also be explored. The direction of these new approaches will be influenced by our understanding of the wishes of the membership as a whole so please take time to fill in and return the questionnaire.

Computer skills

A self-help course for Society members to improve computer skills is planned for February-April this year. The course will include Word, Powerpoint, Excel, Corel and Data transfer and making good use of the Society’s new website. The sessions will be held at St Catherine’s Village Hall, Guildford on Wednesday afternoons 2.30-4.30 on February 24, March 2, 9, 16, 23 and April 6, 13 and 20. Free parking is available.

Tuition will be by Society members. The meeting room is quite small so numbers will be limited to about eight people. It will not be necessary to come to all sessions. There will be no charge for Society members who are preparing and leading the sessions but others will be asked to pay £25 for the course to cover the cost of hiring the room.

Please contact David Calow if you are interested (dm.calow@ntlworld.com). As numbers are limited this will have to be on a first-come-first-served basis.

BOOKHAM COURTE 2015

A second season of excavation at a property behind St Nicolas church in Great Bookham concentrated on areas that were excavated in 2014. The five day excavation was undertaken by members of the Surrey Archaeological Society and involved extending the 2014 trench and digging two smaller trenches in an adjoining garden.

The aims of the 2015 evaluation were to determine if the garden had once been part of the manor complex of Bookham Courte, which was demolished about 1720. Bookham Courte may have been the original abbey farm set up by Chertsey Abbey and is described in a 1614 document as consisting of a manor house covered in tile, a gatehouse, two great barns, a bakery, stables and other buildings surrounded by a great yard. There is a mention of Bookham Courte in the Chertsey Abbey Cartularies of 1332. After the Dissolution of the Monasteries the property passed to the Howards of Effingham.

Bookham Courte’s position on the 1614 map places it to the north east of St Nicolas church. The manor house had two entrances, one from Church Road and one from the Lower Road forming two sides of a square. The Lower Road entrance ran alongside the graveyard while the Church Road entrance was almost opposite the current Barn Hall. Most of this year’s effort was devoted to extending the 2014 trench to the south. Two smaller trenches were dug in the neighbour’s garden.

The 2014 trench had uncovered a layer of demolition material at a depth of 20-30cm. This comprised flint, peg tile and brick. An area of scattered chalk and a group of chalk blocks were covered over for further investigation in 2015. The soil in the central part of Great Bookham is clay and gravel, with chalk found further south on the Downs and heavy London clay to the north.

The main 2015 trench measured 6m by 3m and was positioned overlapping with the 2014 trench and encompassed the chalk blocks in the southern corner of the trench and the chalk scattering at the eastern end. Two small trenches were excavated in the adjoining neighbour’s garden. These two 1m by 1m trenches were approximately 5m apart.

The excavation uncovered more of the demolition surface of flint and tile; this was consistent with the surface excavated in 2014. Medieval pottery was found in the northern part of the trench and most of this dated between 1250 and 1500.

The demolition layer appears in other areas of the garden and is almost certainly demolition material from Bookham Courte. It contains lumps of ferruginous cemented gravel, Lower Greensand, Upper Greensand, flints, a large amount of peg tile and bits of brick and medieval pottery sherds.

Successions of layers were uncovered under the flint area. The first layer of 5-6cm of orangey sandy soil contained few finds and overlaid a very compacted layer of similar soil packed with very small pieces of crushed brick and tile and some charcoal. The underlying layer of sterile orangey clayey soil was about 3-4cm deep and this layer dipped down in places to a layer of chalk.

In the southwestern end of the main trench a line of chalk blocks ran across the trench diagonally from the western corner. The width of the chalk blocks was approximately 20cm. The large high-quality chalk blocks had a flat top and one or two courses were left. It is unclear whether this structure is a wall or some other feature as it is narrow and structurally weak.

The soil over the blocks and to the south was different to the soil to the north which contained the demolition material. The orange sandy soil to the south contained some post medieval and modern pottery.

The layer with the red flecks of crushed brick was above the chalk so these blocks were of an earlier date. In the layer above the chalk was part of a clay pipe with an N on one side and an M or W on the other side. This is similar to an early nineteenth century pipe made in Godalming.

The 2014 gravel surface was uncovered and cleaned and was found to be about 3cm deep and was laid over large flints that were up to 12cm wide. The flints were close-packed and made a very solid surface. They were laid over the chalk scattered surface found in 2014 suggesting the flints were of a later date. The area of gravel and flint was possibly the surface of a yard.
What may be a robbed-out cross wall near the southern end of the chalk blocks consisted of flints and one brick in yellow clay.

In the eastern corner of the trench was a compacted layer of chalk. Further investigation revealed large chalk blocks with flat faces together with solid degrading chalk pieces. These were well packed and contained flint nodules.

An area of this chalk was removed to reveal closely packed flints which looked like a cobbled surface. A greensand block with a flat upper surface and a circular impression in the centre top could be seen towards the side of the trench. The block looked shaped and was left in place for further investigation in 2016. The circular depression had decomposed metal above it. Only part of the block was revealed and it was difficult to estimate its full size or shape. It is possible that this is a door pivot stone with the remains of a metal spike.

The medieval pottery assemblage was dominated once again by Surrey Whitewares of Kingston, Cheam and Surrey Border types dating from early 13th century to the late 15th century. There were also sherds of Grey/Brown Sandy Ware of 12th to 13th century date. Early post medieval pottery was found, but only a few pieces of late post medieval ware.

Grateful thanks go to Emma Corke for supervising Lyn Spencer, and to Angela Mason as trench supervisor. The hardworking diggers were Pauline Hulse, Geoffrey Gower-Kerslake, Mairi Sargeant, Nick Moore, Neil Merryweather, Tim Wilcock, Kathy French, Nigel Bond, Mike Edwards, Chris Quinn, Gill Rolfe and Irene Goring. Also thanks to the finds team - Ceila Bailey, Brenda Hawkins, Ann Morrison, Isabel Ellis, Sylvia Solarski and Jan Spencer who also provided all the tea, coffee and cake!
RESEARCH COMMITTEE: SYMPOSIUM 2016

The symposium will be held in the Ashtead Peace Memorial Hall on Saturday 27 February 2016. A programme has been arranged with talks on the Woking Palace and Abinger excavations. This will end at 3.30pm and will be followed by a session free to all members of the Society to discuss the future plans for the Society. There has been a small change to the programme published with the booking form. The revised programme is below.

2016 SYMPOSIUM SATURDAY 27 FEBRUARY 2016

15.00 CLOSE OF SYMPOSIUM

15.30 The Future Development of the Society: an open discussion which is free of charge for all members to attend

17.00 CLOSE

We are looking for volunteers to help on the day. The catering has been handled by the same team for many years and this cannot be sustained, so we particularly need people willing to help at tea/coffee times.

Displays are of importance to this event since they highlight the amount of work which is done by members throughout the year. If you wish to arrange for display space please contact Rose Hooker at Castle Arch or via rosemary.hooker@blueyonder.co.uk
This annual SHERF conference of Surrey Archaeological Society was held this year in association with Surrey Gardens Trust and was well supported by both groups. Ably chaired by Dr David Bird the conference followed the evolution of parks and gardens in Surrey and England, examining the physical remains in today’s landscape and using documentary research to illuminate the social factors which shaped the evolution of garden styles.

Paul Everson, formerly of RCHME, opened the day by taking an archaeologists view of the evolution of parks and gardens. He explained that the field archaeologist examines sites to determine their origins and how they evolved over time, seeking to understand how features in these ‘landscapes’ would have been experienced by their owners and users. He demonstrated that at certain periods (especially after the Dissolution of the Monasteries and in the Jacobean period) some large parks and gardens were developed as almost public declarations of specific religious or political beliefs.

Elite landscapes of the late medieval period were discussed by Rachel Delman of Oxford University. Illustrated manuscripts and descriptive literature frequently show enclosed gardens at palaces and castles. These gardens seem often to have been designed by ‘elite’ women; they often had limited access controlled by women. The underlying rationale of such gardens was capable of ambiguous interpretation, being linked with representations of both e and the Virgin Mary and so could be regarded as containing both danger and virtue.

The ‘Fens of Surrey’ were then described by Richard Savage of Surrey Archaeological Society. This area in the Lower Wey Valley is full of river and stream channels, many of which have been created or modified by man. At Newark Priory the precinct became enclosed by water on three sides; it was noted that water has special significance in many religions, being not only pure in itself but also capable of washing away impurities. It is possible that Newark Priory was being set apart from the everyday world. The varied use of water to enhance the settings of Woking Palace, Pyrford Place and Esher Place on the River Mole was also discussed showing that Surrey is rich in evolved landscapes.

In the afternoon a review of Tudor and Jacobean gardens in London was given by Dr Paula Henderson. It was explained that early maps can be used to discover where gardens and open spaces were, but their accuracy need to be checked by cross-referencing maps of different dates. These maps will often show major works within large aristocratic gardens such as those bordering the Thames behind the Strand. Such gardens became the repositories of sculpture and became the origin of museum gardens. Other types of garden or green space can also be researched using these maps and as land became more built up then ‘open spaces’ within towns appear to develop as places of privacy and probably of limited accessibility.

Independent research of Albury Park by Jan Clark revealed the influence of friends and contemporaries, the Earl of Arundel and John Evelyn, on the redesign of the garden in the 17th century. The Earl of Arundel owned the estate, and having travelled in Europe he remodelled the grounds of Albury Park in the Italian style with assistance from John Evelyn. They both wished to create a philosophical garden in the Italianate style to facilitate contemplative discourse. The garden of Albury Park is a vital link in garden history before the careers of Kent and Brown.

Finally, Cherril Sands guided a tour through the pleasure garden of Painshill Park. Created by Charles Hamilton in the mid eighteenth century, the garden was designed as a series of scenes to simulate different emotions. After many years of neglect much of the land was bought by Surrey County Council in the late twentieth century and the Painshill Trust was formed with the objective of restoring as much of the original garden as possible. Hamilton had collected new exotics from America in particular and these have now been replanted, while other aspects of the original design have been restored or recreated.

Don Josey of the Surrey Gardens Trust closed the conference, thanking Surrey Archaeological Society for organising the day and announcing that the Trust would be surveying the gardens of West Horsley Place in 2016.
